then went down to death.

This grim bit of trangdy, only a little interiode in the whole terrible procession of horror aboard the sinking boat, decurred high above the heads of the doomed men and women who walted death in the black galleries of the decks.

High above the murmur of voices in prayer, the harsh treble of voices in prayer, the harsh treble of voices in all of the boats that could be launched were already out.

high above the murmur of voices in prayer, the harsh trelie of voices in mirieks of fear, between black sky and hlack water. Harold Bride, the assistant wireless man, worked justice upon a deward as God gave him light to do so. WOULD-BE MURDERER'S BODY IN WIRELESS COOP.

"I had to do it," was the way Bride but it when an Evening World reporter found him alone for a few brief moments on the Cunard pier this morning. "I could not lef that coward dis a decent sailor's death, so I shot him down and left him alone there in the wireless coop to go down with the hulk of the ship. He is there yet—the only one in the wireless room, where Phillips, a real here, worked madly to save the lives of two thousands and more people."

"I don't know how it happened that in a flash I got it. I got it that this fellow was going to kill Phillips for his life beit. So I nulled my gun and shot him chrough the back of the head. I was very close to him. He went down quickly with a kind of a grunt. Phillips ran down aft and that was the last I ever saw of the gallant chap."

How Bride was saved in a marvel which he himself cannot well explain. He says that after he lost sight of Phillips he ran to the boat deck where he had last seen men struggling with the collapsible boat. They were still at it, seemingly not knowing how to get it over the side. Just as Bride started to lend a hand a wave came right over the boat dock, the Titanic the boat floated clear.

He held onto an oarlook and after like it of blustering winds. Velogen then being in its final plunge, and the boat floated clear.
